Naturally Yours

Barnum Creek Nature Reserve

RICK WHITTEKER
Special to County Life

Barnum Creek Nature Reserve offer hikers and walkers with a variety of landscapes and trail lengths. Yours Outdoors recently offered Best of Barnum: A Guided Hike to show participants all that BCNR has to offer. /Photo submitted by Rick Whitteker

As a hiking and canoe tripping guide, you never know what kind of people are going to sign up for you trips. What kind of footwear will they come with? How fit are they? Is their raingear really a $3 emergency poncho? I quickly size up the participants before my safety briefing, mentally noting any yellow or red flags.

The flags were all green for Stephanie and Brian when we met at the trailhead of Barnum Creek Nature Reserve for our 2-3 hike entitled, Best of Barnum: A Guided Hike offered by Yours Outdoors. They appeared well prepared for our 5 km hike on the Heritage Trail in this new nature reserve near Haliburton. A gracious donation to the Haliburton Highlands Land Trust in 2018 by Leopoldina and Margaret Dobrzensky now allows this property to be accessed by the public through a well-maintained trail system.

The Heritage Trail, described as wide and generally flat with some moderately steep inclines, becomes a 6 km hike once the interesting Waterfall Way side trail is added. Stephanie and Brian were keen to extend the hike route beyond the Heritage Trail and the Waterfall Way trail is worth the extra effort. It initially climbs up through some open meadows and then drops down into a fully forested valley with Barnum Creek tumbling its way through the rugged landscape in this section of trail. This beautiful creek was fast flowing with the recent autumn rain, flowing west to Barnum Lake.

Crossing the creek on a solid wooden bridge, the Waterfall Way Trail reconnects with the Heritage Trail. This trail is a wide, leafy laneway through one of the nicest mature maple forests anywhere in the Highlands. As dappled sunlight breaks through the partially leafed canopy, our conversation ebbed and flowed through a myriad of topics including the unique etchings of the Yellow-Bellied Sapsucker, the natural aroma of the Balsam Fir resin and the tendency of Yellow Birch, hemlock trees to use nursing logs as their seed beds and our favourite trails in Ontario. The history of logging in the area was a topic that also came up, and Stephanie expressed how impressed she was with the Hawk Lake Log Chute in Algonquin Highlands. A travel blogger, Stephanie was taking in some of the attractions of Haliburton County to add to her website.

With total immersion into the rolling hills and valleys of this mature maple forest complete, the trail opens into a grassy meadow with intermittent large piles of stones from historical efforts to farm the property. The change of scenery is dramatic as the golden tipped grasses sway in the breeze, and deer trails through the meadow are obvious as the grasses are trampled in their wake. We could not help but to be impressed with the work that must have gone into homesteading here. Information plaques remind us of the importance of open meadows to vulnerable wildlife species in the Highlands and outlines the human history of the property now in capable hands of the land trust.

The hike returns to the trailhead via Gould Crossing Road, an unmaintained road which passes by the Dobrzensky private residence and property, not part of the land trust agreement. After hiking through this amazing property, I couldn't help but look over at the house and silently thank the Dobrzensky family for their years of land stewardship and the generosity of their donation. Upon arrival back to the parking area, Stephanie and Brian expressed their interest in returning during the winter and having another guided hike on snowshoes. This had less to do with me and more to do with the lure and beauty of the wonderful Barnum Creek Nature Reserve.

Day hike preparation

Even the simplest day hike needs basic preparation to be prepared. Depending on the trail length, the season and location of your hike, the following should be the minimum added to your day pack before departing:

- Map of the area you are hiking
- First aid kit and knowledge of the use of the contents
- Water- at least 1 litre
- Snack or lunch
- A fully charged phone
- A whistle
- Raingear and/or spare clothes in a waterproof bag
- For longer, more remote hikes add:
- A lighter or matches
- Firestarter
- A compass (and know how to use it)
- Pocket knife
- Emergency foil blanket or large garbage bag
- Flashlight

Most importantly, let someone know where you are going and when you expect to return. This small step will reassure you that if something goes very wrong, someone will know where to look for you.

Whatever the problem, community is the answer

AMANDA DUNCOMBE-LEE

Point in Time

"Whatever the Problem, Community is the Answer" is a quote by Margaret J. Wheatley, American author and community activist. She wrote that as a species, humans have a natural instinct to be with each other, but we also tend to embrace group mentality – seeking attachment to groups of like-minded individuals for belonging and protection from other groups. She notes that our greatest challenge is to explore the paradox of freedom and community – to honour our own individualism while maintaining relationship with others who have different experiences and perspectives. Sometimes, the truly transformative events, ideas and exchanges happen on the boundaries of these relationships, thereby forcing the boundaries to shift or dissipate; however, for this to happen, we first we need an agreement on what is important and why we belong together.

Despite our living in an increasingly polarized society, surrounded by destructive dynamics, attempting honest conversations can reveal more shared principles than we might otherwise expect; Indeed, perhaps it's just the path we are taking that's causing us to get lost, blocked, or crash into each other.

Recently, Point in Time was one of several local service providers hosting a virtual event on fostering a compassionate and evidence-based approach to substance use and mental health in Haliburton County, featuring people with lived and living experience with substance use. There were many valid recommendations and observations, and the speakers' closing comments explored some important themes about how we can forge new paths simply by actively listening and supporting each other. For example, it was noted by those with lived experience that dialogue around substance use doesn't have to be complicated. It doesn't always even have to be about your position on the issue at hand, but rather your approach to listening and sharing – whether it's meeting people where they're at or deciding if you want to allow vulnerability and access to yourself that others can take from. Relationships are the backbone of community, and the smallest things can make others feel supported and strengthen these relationships, such as sharing a joke to make things a little lighter or deciding to be part of something bigger than you in an attempt to see what's possible.

Whatever the problem, community is the answer. When nourished properly, small, local community networks can become bigger forces for influence and change. And as we reflect on the wisdom provided by the contributors to these networks, sometimes we discover that the courageous leaders we long for are already here; that those who are willing and able to step forward just needed to be asked.

Those Other Movies is excited to announce a return to the movies!

Tickets are $10 at the door, and 2019 passholders, who are owed three movies, will be admitted free.

Those Other Movies starts on Nov. 10 with a 4:15 and 7:15 p.m. start time at the Northern Lights Performing Arts Pavilion with a guest presenter of Ice Breaker: The 1972 Summit Series.

Fifty years ago, more than 20 million Canadians and 150 million Soviet citizens were mesmerized by an intense series of hockey games now known as the Summit Series. Ice Breaker follows the extraordinary story of former diplomat Gary Smith, the role he played during the Cold War hockey series, the events that surrounded the series, and how Canadians came together as never before.

This compelling film is unlike anything ever done on the subject, uniting cinematic, evocative landscapes, poetic narratives, and behind-the-scenes politics with a gripping sports story about the way the Canada vs. Russia matchup made a mark on the hockey world.

Featuring Wayne Gretzky, Vladislav Tretiak and Margaret Trudeau, Ice Breaker unearths stories with fresh perspectives and unique analysis, exploring the impact of the games on Canadians from coast to coast.

We are thrilled to announce Helen Parker, a county-based filmmaker, will be present to talk about her part in the making of the documentary.

A season of change

A SEASON OF CHANGE. Fresh starts. Turning the pages on a new chapter. With the recent election, you can feel the buzz of new beginnings bubbling in our community.

When I first settled into Minden, it was two weeks before the last election. Four years ago. While it's felt like a blink of an eye whilst simultaneously feeling like an eternity, when you have these significant timelines, it gives such a tangible measurement for time. Four years. Four years ago, we had never experienced a pandemic. Never applied the word "lockdown" to our regular conversations. We did not have a brand new arena in Minden. We still had a playground in Head Lake Park. Our kids had never dabbled in online school. All this; big, small, happy, sad, and so much more.

EMILY STONEHOUSE
County Life staff

Life was different. Was it simpler? Maybe. Maybe not. Was it different? Maybe. Maybe not. These major things that may feel exciting, challenging, new, different, weird, uncomfortable; we learned to live with them. As humans, we adapt. As humans who live in Haliburton County, we thrive.

I have recently accepted a position as a reporter/photographer for the Haliburton Echo, Minden Times, and County Life. I have been casually writing these editorial columns for a few years now, and they bring me great joy. Sending my words out into the world for others to read is humbling and cathartic. Knowing that my thoughts can occasionally resonate with others makes me feel human, vulnerable, and like I am part of something big, bold, and beautiful.

Yet with this new role, I will be shifting gears and starting to cover news-based articles as well as opinion-based editorials. This is a shift that initially concerned me (OK, full disclosure, it still does). The part that concerned me the most? How do I stop writing from my heart? How do I represent someone else effectively and accurately? How do I write a column that does not offend people? How do I turn off this part of me that writes raw and organic material and turn on the switch to write professionally and objectively?

It's the season of change. A time for something new; to learn, grow, and feel out those uncomfortable corners in your brain that have been wired for sticky cycles. Those cycles we get caught in every day. The cycles that oppose change and revel in comfort.

If this whole county can shift gears and feel optimism for change on the horizon, then I can as well. Will it be easy? Nope. Will I question myself? Constantly. Is it the right time for a change? Absolutely. On all fronts.

Hats off to Darren Lum. I first met Darren more years ago than I care to publicly share in a news article. In his time with the community and the papers, he has covered sporting events, elections, shows, and highlighted significant people in the Haliburton Highlands. He was a voice for our community, and recently, has decided to turn the page on a new chapter. As he mentioned in his farewell editorial, "we are all directors of our own life story…"

So, through this chapter of change and growth, how will you direct your life story? With a new start comes hesitation and fear. If it felt comfortable, it wouldn't be a new start. If it felt easy, it wouldn't be worth it.

So, to the new councillors, the new people to our community, and the people just starting something new, how about you break outside that comfort zone? Challenge yourself. Question yourself. Do something that scares you. It always feels impossible, until it's done. Nothing new happens without something new happening, so be that change you want to see – not only in yourself, but in the world around you.

Top 10 reasons you dog comes when you call

ONE OF THE main differences between dogs and cats is that dogs can and will come reliably to you when called. This, if you think about it, is a minor miracle, since it is something most of us cannot even get our kids to do. I do not have the answer as to why dogs do this, so I consulted with my own dog and here's what I was told. Nothing. My dog does not speak English.

STEVE GALEA
Humour Columnist

With that in mind, here are my top 10 guesses why a dog comes when called.

1. They confused your voice with that of a two-pound sirloin steak.
2. They were going that way anyhow.
3. Every now and then they want to present the illusion of obedience.
4. They are experiencing severe flatulence and would like you to know it.
5. They are being chased by a bear. They would like to pass on that burden onto you.
6. Otherwise, how could they show you the road killed squirrel they found?
7. Sheer coincidence.
8. You pick up their poop. It's the least they could do.
9. It just makes you so happy.
10. When you said "Here!" they heard "Deer!"

Please welcome Vivian Collings as our new editor

It gives me great pleasure to welcome Vivian Collings as the new editor of the Haliburton County Echo and County Life. Vivian is taking over from Darren Lum who left last week for a new chapter in his life. Vivian has proven herself to be a great story teller, photographer, and organized beyond belief.

All of the staff at the Echo and Times are looking forward to working with Vivian. And I know our many subscribers and readers will be pleased with Vivian and our great news team. Here's to a new chapter!

Happy reading.

Freedom

Once this land was owned by none
Its clearest voice from sky was spun
Instead of mouths from idle chairs
Who took wild wood and made it theirs

As country filled from wide and far
With people seeking brighter star
It lost a bit, but gained a name
And entered soon a different game

Where money, title, influence
Became a wall, an iron fence
And power went, not to the wise,
But wealthiest, those in disguise

Pretending loudly, country-mad
A chess piece king, all armour-clad Against the vision that one day
The sky would sicken, ground decay

But folk can't own the earth and air
They could belong here, balance, share
If power weren't a currency
We'd count again on land and sea

To regulate with nature's cause
Return its health, make fairer laws
Tell children why the firs are tall
To hug trees, not possess at all.

Singing to youth
Maeve Palmer, a soprano opera singer and University of Toronto doctoral student, sang a few songs at Highlands Opera Studio's (HOS) Open House – Why Choose Opera at the Haliburton Highlands Museum on Monday, Oct. 24. The event was an introduction to HOS' new young adult opera club program. For more information visit www.highlandsoperastudio.com. /VIVIAN COLLINGS Staff

Landscapes

Pines rising from the mist, on a canvas, blank as Sky, sepia trees springing from the smudge of island, floating in the white space of Lake,
the scribble of a pair of wings,
swooping above it,
the painting reflecting the weather outside, its rawness drawing me inside, into a place whose walls are washed in landscapes of hills and Lakes and Sky, brushstrokes of grey sweeping across the vastness of Sky, swirling into a storm,
curves of hills, undulating beneath it,
the immensity of the canvas, its stark-ness seeping into me,
a feeling of peace, and its fragility, that can fracture at any moment, by the bluster blowing beneath the quiet of Sky.
Another canvas, sparse and serene, small enough to fit in the palms of both hands, of a solitary tree, springing from a hillock, beneath stipples of clouds, making me wonder about the landscape beyond the confines of the canvas, what's not seen fueling my imagination as much as what's seen, feeling the Wind that sweeps through the tree.
My eyes roam towards another landscape, a canvas of only Sky, cracks crumbling the clouds, light flowing through them, but when I step closer to drink in the pale blueness of Sky, I see that it's ice, refracting light.
I peer into that blueness, feeling small, surrounded by all these canvases hanging up on the walls, the paintings providing escape on such a surly day, when Sky
threatens Rain,
Wind scalps trees, their leaves whirling outside.
I wander around the room, my eyes devouring the hills and forests and Sky, the landscapes reflecting back at me,
my own brooding nature, wondering whether the painter knows what will flow from their brush, with the very first stroke,
or whether they let the feeling rise,
like the pines seeping through the mist, my eyes meandering back to the first painting they saw, the sepia trees springing from the smudge of island,
the scribble of wings, that I imagine to be a seagull, flapping, unfettered and free, through all that space,
worlds unfurling on these walls, feelings and memories swirling inside me, taking one last glance at the Sky of ice, before I open the door and step back outside,
the silhouettes of hills undulating like the curves of spines, beneath a blank Sky, a seagull squawking through the rawness of Air,
as inner and outer worlds collide.

Development Corporation ready for official opening

Starting up a business is, for many people, a dream they keep in the back of their head, something to think about on the way home from work. And unfortunately, for lack of money and know-how, that's usually where it remains. In Haliburton County, going into business can be especially tricky. The winter unemployment rate is 20 per cent and higher, the nearest large market is a drive of two and a half hours to the south, and then, of course, there's the problem of skilled labour - there isn't any.

Nobody said it was easy.

But there are signs things are getting better. This past summer, many lodges and construction companies are reporting, was the best on record. Unemployment figures for the last six months are below previous averages and property values - one of the main indicators of economic health - are up.

So if there ever was a time to start up a business, it's now. And for the first time in the county, there's an institution designed specifically to cater to the needs of novice entrepreneurs. It's called the Haliburton County Development Corporation and its offices are in the Village of Haliburton on York Street, adjacent to the Rails' End Gallery.

The purpose of the corporation is to give serious entrepreneurs the boost they need to put their ideas to work. In practical terms, that means making loans - for as much as $25,000 - and providing clients with information and assistance in getting their business going. Because it's part of a federal government project, the corporation can offer the same interest rates you'd find at a bank, but ask for less security. Even more encouraging, it can give flexible repayment terms. The board of governors - seventeen businessmen from across the county - understand the cylical tourist-bound economy of the Highlands and when a client says that things are tough in winter, they'll know what he's talking about.

Andy Campbell is manager of the Haliburton County Development Corporation. "Primarily," says Campbell, "our mandate is to increase employment in the county. Since new businesses create the most jobs, that's what we're interested in, but we'll also look at companies that want to expand as well as certain municipally sponsored projects.

"Even if it's just a guy and his wife who want to start up a motel so they can work for themselves, that's two jobs being created, we feel we can be of assistance there as well."

Besides lack of start-up funds, one of the biggest problems novice entrepreneurs face, is not having the necessary know-how. To some extent, says Campbell, the corporation can be of assistance there as well.

"A lot of people will come to me and say, 'Hey, I've got this great idea for a business and I just have this feeling it'll work.' But a feeling is not enough. Anyone who lends money these days wants to see a business plan; an explanation of exactly how the new business is going to run, the nature and demand for its product and growth projections.

"Ideally, that's what we want on the table in front of us when someone comes asking for money. A well-written and organized plan is the best argument someone who is going into business can make for himself."

But obviously, explains Campbell, the corporation doesn't expect that of everyone. Besides lending money, its primary purpose is to help new business people by showing them how to put together a business plan.

"If someone comes to me with an idea for a business but doesn't quite understand how to put it into action, I'll help him. I'll assist - free of charge - in putting the plan together, and when it's done, the client is under no obligation to come to the corporation for money. He's free to take it to a bank or anywhere else he chooses."

Besides help in putting business plans together, the development corporation also offers courses, in co-operation with Sir Sandford

Fall back this weekend

Remember that hour of sleep you lost way back in the spring when the clocks were moved ahead to accommodate Daylight Savings Time? Well, you're about to get it back.

This weekend, clocks revert to Standard Time. If you're confused about which way to move the hands of time, simply remember the adage, Spring ahead, Fall back.

Move your clocks back one hour when you retire Saturday evening and gain the extra hour of sleep that you missed so dearly last spring.

We had the pleasure of working with Sales Representative Rosemarie Jung. Not only was she knowledgeable about the area, she was so responsive to our many questions. She was very professional, but still warm and enthusiastic during the process. We would highly recommend The Haliburton Real Estate Team.

Nicole Baxter was absolutely amazing and would recommend her to everyone! She is so down to earth, but learns who her clients are and what they want without a million questions. Such an amazing experience working with her, she made the whole process so comfortable and stress free for us.

What's the difference between my home's MPAC assessed value and its current market value?

- S.Sutherland

Every home has an MPAC assessed value and a current market value, but they are two very different things. MPAC assesses and classifies properties in your area based on recent sales and functional details of your property. These assesments are provided to the municipality and are used to base your property taxes which help pay for community services. These assessments are only updated every four years. The current market value however, is the price that a buyer is willing to pay for a home, and that a seller is willing to accept today. This price is driven by both functional details and emotional reactions.
